A private industrial project management company based in Birmingham is starting a certification program that will help technicians acquire the skills they need to thrive in the new industrial revolution.

Adah International Inc. is launching three Manufacturing Skill Standards Council (MSSC) logistics and manufacturing training certifications. The certification system provides front-line production and logistics technicians the skills and knowledge they need for an evolving workplace.

Adah is providing instructors for three certifications: Certified Logistics Technician (CLT), Certified Logistics Associate (CLA) and Certified Production Technician (CPT).

Through lectures, online study and hands-on training, the MSSC curricula can be a fast and affordable way to train technicians to produce and move products.

According to an analysis of 400 technicians who completed the MSSC CPT training in 2012-2014, certified technicians earn 14 percent more than those who are not.

As we've reported, Adah also has produced a high school logistics training program and an advanced machine apprenticeship program.

"We are proud to take yet another innovative step forward with the third addition to the Adah International talent-development portfolio," said Kirk Atkinson, president of Adah. "More importantly, this is about offering the best training and education to people so they can have access to these great careers, while also keeping costs down and quality up for employers."

Adah International is a boutique project management firm that helps companies with facility planning, construction management, equipment installation and operations rollout in Europe and the Americas.
